del mundo sensible y traernos de alli la seguridad de su límite. Pero tal empresa, con la severa impronta de un desolado materialismo, se rige por el entusiasmo de un reconstruir el mundo, mediante el dominio permanente de las imágenes.

Para la poesia de Lucrecio no hay misterio en las cosas. Aquella fugaz contemplación del cielo estrellado, aquel dudar sobre el origen del mundo y su relación con el numen de los dioses son quizá los pocos momentos enque el poeta se hace preguntas muy terribles sobre suser y destino. En todo lo demás, en los múltiples temas. de sus seis cantes, la confianza del poeta se contenta conmanifestarnos aquella lumbre que él ha extraído de la entraña misma de las cosas materiales. Todo es elaro, explicable, intuible. Empero la raíz más honda de su virtualidad poética es este enfrentarse de su lirismo frenético con el relieve intenso de una concreta y misteriosa. presencia. Por debajo de sus postulados epicureos, de sus soluciones científicas y de su certeza sobre la constitución del mundo y del hombre, corre la esencial vida de su poema. Lucrecio en la terrible alucinación de su enajenamiento experiencial, representa, como auténtico poeta, el hombre abandonado frente a la dinâmica incxorable de la realidad material. Y él ha sabido transmitirnos todo el más profundo y angustioso fruto de sudesolada contemplación, como en una interminable noche de la inteligencia, ávida de su verdadero alimento, Finalmente, su poesia es también el pathos que la estremece del primero al último hexámetro. Ya hemos expuesto cual es el órigen y el sentido de ese patetismo lucreciano. Mas no se crea que no integra sustancialmente la objetividad poética de la obra.

Hallamos, en consecuencia, un ámbito donde Lucrecio se yerque en su calidad de poeta. La validez esencial de De rerum natura está en lo que tiene de poesía. Y la figura del autor no se encuentra casualmente incluida en la unidad del mundo antiguo por el hecho de permitirnos algún conocimiento del epicurcismo greco-romano, cuanto por la manifiesta realización y actualidad poética de la obra. Lucrecio, poeta latino, nos entrega la magnifica estructura, con lenguaje y hexámetros latinos, de una experiencia sobre el mundo de la naturaleza y de la materia concentrada en el espectáculo de este nuestro mundo sensible.
